

SDS 237: Group Contract

19 August, 2021

Working in groups can be both incredibly rewarding and incredibly challenging. The most effective collaborations explicitly outline group roles, expectations, and procedures in advance to coordinate how the group will operate, to establish mechanisms of accountability, and to mitigate the risk of conflict. It is important that, throughout the semester, you address group concerns as they come up. This may involve assigning someone to check in with team members that are falling behind, establishing expectations for attending office hours and asking for help, calling team meetings to discuss issues, or reaching out to the instructor to resolve enduring and unresolved conflicts.
